1. At the outbreak of the Korean war, the North Korean government set up the Organizing Committee of the Korean People's Volunteer Army. [redacted] schools, factories, rural districts, and social organizations were given quotas of volunteers to fill. Often men were forced from their homes into the army, and under these circumstances the rate of desertion from the Volunteer Army was between 13 and 16 percent.
